Two New Issues of Social Justice
on Women

Social Justice is proud to announce the publication of two sequential issues on the rights of women. Part of the legacy of the Reagan era has been the devastation of economic and social programs benefitting women and children. An emboldened right wing continues to push its agenda of traditional family values resulting in increased attacks on women, minorities, the gay community, and on new and creative visions of human relations. Concomitantly, the social control of gender and the reinforcing of traditional gender roles have come to play an increasingly central role. Such an atmosphere prompted Social Justice's decision to devote these two issues to women. The two issues are:

Criminality, Imprisonment, and Women's Rights in the 1990s (Vol. 17, No.2), and Feminism and the Social Control of Gender (Vol. 17, No. 3)
